

PACKING LIST

The Classic Salkantay Trek 5 days / 4 nights

Welcome to the Classic Salkantay Trek!

Before embarking on this adventure, it's important to prepare your gear so that your experience is memorable. Keep in mind that in the Andes, the weather is very variable, with cold temperatures in the early morning and at night, heavy rains, and intense sun during midday. But don't worry, with the right equipment, you can enjoy the hike without any problems.

Take note and get ready for this adventure!

Although the following list is not mandatory, we recommend that you bring these items as they will be of great help in your adventure. We assure you that they will be very useful, but of course, the final decision is yours. Get ready for an unforgettable experience on the Classic Salkantay Trek!

Before Traveling

Make sure to bring your documents (valid passport or ID), extra money, and personal medications

► Passport

► Extra money

► Personal medication

Equipment

Backpack

Remember that our service includes a duffle bag we'll transport for you. Therefore, we recommend bringing a medium-sized backpack (15 to 25 liters) to store your personal belongings: water bottle, snacks, some clothes, toiletries, and your camera.

- A medium-sized backpack (15 to 25 liters) will be more than enough.
- Choose a waterproof backpack or bring a waterproof cover to protect your belongings from the rain.
- Look for a backpack with compartments and pockets to better organize your things.

Sleeping bag

Nights in the Andes can be freezing, reaching temperatures below zero. Therefore, we recommend bringing a sleeping bag with thermal insulation of -15°C to keep you warm. Don't worry about carrying it, we will carry it for you to the campsites.

- We recommend bringing a sleeping bag with thermal insulation of -15°C .

Walking sticks

Walking sticks are an essential tool in your hiking gear, as they help to cushion the load and maintain balance while trekking through the mountains. They are beneficial for protecting knees on uneven terrain in the Andes. While not mandatory, many hikers prefer them for the comfort they provide.

Water bottle or Camelback

Staying hydrated during the hike is crucial. We will provide filtered water during the trip. Therefore, it is necessary to bring a container to store and drink water. The Camelbak is a handy item for drinking comfortably without having to unpack.

Flashlight

When the sun begins to set in the afternoon or during your stay at the campsites, it is essential to have a flashlight on hand to illuminate if you need to look for something among your belongings or go to the bathroom. Headlamp flashlights are efficient, as they allow you to keep your hands free.

Don't forget your camera!

Remember to bring your camera and its charger or battery so that you can capture the impressive landscapes and experiences of the hike. It is also important to bring a charged external battery and additional batteries if you need them.

► Camera

► Charger

► Batteries

► External battery

Personal Care

► Sunscreen

To protect your skin from ultraviolet radiation in the Andes, bring sunscreen with protection greater than 70+.

► Insect repellent

We recommend bringing insect repellent to avoid mosquito bites discomfort in the trek's warm areas.

► Personal hygiene products

Don't forget to bring your personal hygiene products: toothbrush, toothpaste, soap, shampoo, comb, or others that you use regularly. Keep in mind that primary products are sold in small local stores.

Snacks

To regain energy during the hike, we recommend bringing healthy, low-saturated fat and carbohydrate-rich energy products such as:

- Nuts
- Energy bars
- Dried meat
- Energy gels
- Electrolytes
- Chocolates
- Candies

What should I wear on the trek?

Upper Garments

Jacket

Choosing the right jacket is essential to enjoy the Salkantay experience fully. To choose the right jacket to wear, we suggest the following:

- Temperatures in the Andes can drop below 0 °C. Choose a jacket with thermal insulation to keep you warm.
- Precipitation in the Peruvian Andes is unpredictable and abundant. Therefore, it is recommended that your jacket be waterproof and have a hood to protect you from the rain.
- Choose a jacket with multiple pockets with zippers to store objects and protect them from the rain.
- Some passengers bring a lightweight waterproof jacket or windbreaker to feel light during the hike and, separately, a thick and warm jacket for colder moments. Others prefer a single jacket that combines thermal and waterproof protection. The choice is yours.

In addition to a jacket, we recommend bringing the following garments for the upper body:

► Warm Jacket

To protect yourself from the cold, it's advisable to wear warm, comfortable, lightweight, and breathable garments such as fleeces or sweaters.

► Long Sleeved T-Shirt

Keep in mind that in some areas of the hike, especially in warmer ones, there may be mosquitoes, so wearing a long-sleeved shirt is recommended.

► Raincoat

Also, bringing a rain poncho can be very useful in case of rain. Make sure it's waterproof and that you can cover your backpack too.

Lower Garments

Pants

To walk comfortably, choosing pants with the right features is important. Consider the climate in the Andes before making your decision.

- Choose synthetic pants that dry quickly, are flexible and resistant, provide freedom of movement, and have smooth seams to avoid chafing on the skin. It's recommended that they have several pockets.
- We recommend wearing waterproof pants during the rainy season (from September to March).
- In addition, you should consider the low temperatures. You can opt for thermally insulated pants or mesh-type pants underneath to keep you warm in the coldest stretches of the hike.

Additional lower body garments:

► Thermal pants

Will keep you warm in the coldest stretches of the hike.

► Shorts

For the hottest stretches of the day, bring shorts that allow you to feel cool and light.

► Hiking socks

Suitable socks will prevent blisters or chafing due to sweat and friction.

Swimwear

At the Lucmabamba camp, you'll have the option to enjoy the Cocalmayo hot springs. Remember to bring swimwear and a towel to enjoy a relaxing bath to reward your effort.

Swimwear

Towel

Sandals

Accessories

Protect yourself from the sun

During the hike, it's important to protect yourself from the sun, especially during noon. Therefore, you should bring the following:

► Hat

Bring a hat, preferably with protection for your neck and face, and choose breathable and lightweight materials

► Sunglasses

Protect your eyes from the sun's rays with sunglasses with adequate UV protection.

Protect yourself from the cold

The weather in the Andes can be freezing, especially at night. To keep yourself warm, we recommend bringing the following accessories:

► Wool hat

During the coldest moments of the hike, keeping your head and ears covered is essential. We recommend bringing a wool hat.

► Gloves

Your hands can feel the cold wind of the Andes. Wearing gloves will help protect them from the cold.

► Buff

We also suggest bringing a bandana, scarf, or buff, to avoid the cold air and dust.

What shoes to choose?

We recommend wearing specific hiking shoes with the following characteristics:

- Flexible, thick sole with good grip
- Comfortable and supportive for the foot
- Waterproof

Lightweight footwear or sandals

After a day of hiking, your feet may feel tired and need a break. For greater comfort at the campsite, we recommend bringing sandals or lightweight footwear to change shoes and relax your feet.

WE ADVISE YOU TO WEAR YOUR SHOES A FEW DAYS BEFORE THE HIKE TO GET USED TO THEM AND BREAK THEM IN.
DON'T WEAR YOUR SHOES FOR THE FIRST TIME ON THE HIKE!
